Time to Detoxify

We ask a lot of our digestive tract. We rely on it to not only breakdown the foods we eat and make them available for absorption, but also to aid in immunity, provide for energy levels and to be the first strike in detoxifying our system.

Detoxifying Necessity

We don't often realize the magnitude of the task performed by our gut. We eat three square meals a day, and usually without a second thought, assume that everything is alright. It is not until we experience heartburn, gas, bloating or perhaps a loss of energy, that we are faced with the notion that it is time to clean the system. This "cleaning" is called detoxification.

Unfriendly Microtoxins, poorly absorbed foods, heavy metals and chemicals - these materials can accumulate in the digestive tract and begin to undermine our overall health by inhibiting the absorption of nutrients from our diet and supplements, and increasing the absorption of toxins. This can result in diarrhea, bloating, bad breath, skin problems, fatigue, hypertension, a weakened immune system and more.

Benefits of a Healthy System:

Toxins accumulate in the body, and our ability to detoxify or clean out these foreign substances is important in maintaining overall health. Studies suggest that the inability to detoxify may be a factor in such diseases as:

- Chronic fatigue syndrome
- Fibromyalgia
- Multiple chemical sensitivity
- Alzheimer's disease
- Parkinson's disease
- Immune System related illnesses
